What does ‘home’ mean to you?

Graveney for Peace is a brilliant time to celebrate our own cultural heritage, but also a time to reflect on current world events. Globally,people are living with the threat of displacement, violence and a complete change to what they call “home.”

Currently, an exhibition in the Migration Museum “Nowhere to Go but Anywhere” explores the feeling of being a stranger everywhere you go. You leave home and you change, and when you go back, everything’s different. But you’re not completely a part of your new home either. How do we find the sense of home? How do we reinvent our identity? Who are we when our world falls apart?

In this exhibition, visitors were asked to write what ‘home’ means to them - you can read some of the suggestions as a form (on the left)

MIGRATION MUSEUM

Task: As part of our Graveney for Peace display, we’d like you to write down what ‘home’ means to you. It is anonymous, and will be used to show all the different things we consider when we think of “home.” Please hand these to your form tutor at the end (who we hope will fill one in too!)
